better, and sports who were at the ringside still say if Erne had had more heart or confidence that Corbett would have gone a few pegs.

Tonight Erne will feel more like a champion. His win over Attell will swell him up some, and if he can weather over a round or two nicely his friends look for him to stick with Corbett and do what he did with Attell.
Corbett differs from Attell, however, in that he has a wallop. This alone scares a lot of boys, and if Erne should stop one or two, his heart may get weak again and his legs active.

He is the stiffest argument that Corbett could have selected, and the result is anxiously walted for.
